CONSTIPATION

Definition

Constipation affects more than 4 million people in the United States. Infrequent bowel movement is the result of a poor diet, a lack of exercise and/or an endocrinological problem. The medications usually recommended by conventional medicine, such as stimulant laxatives, can produce severe side effects with cramping and pain, malabsorption, and chronic inflammation of the colon.

Through the patient's medical history, Homotoxicology® attempts to identify the reasons for the constipation and treats the condition by taking care of the basic problem. The approach should be multi-factorial; therefore a high-fiber diet will be recommended together with a homotoxicological treatment and exercise. Homotoxicology will work in depth on the functional disturbance in relation to the pathology.

You can choose 2 to 3 medications at the most that will fit your patient's needs. See reverse for further examples.
